What happened last week in Sixth form

In the run up to mock exams next week, year 13 students have been working hard revising. On Monday the assembly celebrated International Womens Week, focusing on the difference between equality and equity and why gender equality isn't enough anymore. On Tuesday students had the opportunity to look through the newsletter during mentoring sessions and Year 12 students enjoyed a VESPA session on making mistakes. Wellbeing Wednesdays saw students enjoying origami, Gaslands, ethical debate, book club and playing basketball (shout out to Mr Hall and Ms England for getting involved!). Thursday was staff training and on Friday we Mocked the Week in the weekly quiz.

Dyson workshop

The workshops challenge students to use their engineering, electronic and problemsolving skills to program a robot Lego Mindstorms with the ability to navigate through a room and avoid obstacles along the way. Much like the Dyson's own robot vacuum. the aim of the workshop is to help develop their problem-solving, creativity and communication skills. Using new technology and new ways of thinking, they provide insight into a real engineering company, from experts at Dyson who lead the sessions.

Maths inspiration event

This week, our year 12 maths students attended the Maths Insight event at Reading's Hexagon Theatre. The event comprised of three brilliant minds- Sammie Buzzard, Hugh Hunt and Ben Sparks. Sammie Buzzard who is a glaciologist and climate scientist, kicked off the event by considering the use of mathematics in climate change action and predictions. For example, scientists and various organisations use maths to predict what the reduction in the mass of artic ice will be in future years. Interestingly, the estimation of a Japanese elementary school has been closer than that of NASA in recent years. Hugh Hunt is best known from his documentaries with Channel 4. One of which is the Great Wall of Death's world record attempt and exploration of how a motorcycle can ride around a vertical wall. In his segment, he demoed: why bicycle wheels stay upright when adequate force is applied; why there was backward rotation of a tennis ball; and he brought out a boomerang, which he threw out into the crowd. Of course, it made its way back to him. Ben sparks' 'The scared geometry of chance' talk was inspired Sting's the Shape of my heart. He focused on the use of probability in poker games. We calculated the chances of being dealt a Flush in a game. He made a bet with a student that amongst a small section of the theatre, two or more people share the same birthday. He bet £20 and the student bet £5. Ben won the bet. After which, he devilishly explained that the odds were in his favour. Did you know that with 23 people the odds that two people share the same birthday is approx. 50%? And with 70 people, it is close to certain? Overall, a very fun and engaging event for the students, with lots of laughter and audience participation. A great way to show that maths can be quite exciting.

- March 14 @ 14:15 15:00 Dr Mark Rimmer, Associate Professor in Media Studies at UEA, will explore End of Audience. Mark will consider the argument that audience in terms of a mass of viewers, listeners or readers needs to be fundamentally rethought, encouraging participants to reflect on their own engagements with media and consider the complexity and multidimensionality of twenty-first-century media audiencehood. Find out more »
- March 14 @ 15:45 16:30 US Politics: Crisis Of Democracy in the USA? Tutorial Aberystwyth (KS5) Find out more » Dr Jenny Mathers and Dr Lucy Taylor from the Department of International Politics will ask the question: Is there a crisis of democracy in the USA? Following on from their Headliner video (see event page link below) which sets the scene and prepares students for the live event, Jenny and Lucy will lead a workshop exploring the US political system and its flaws. Through a discussion of key contemporary issues including the storming of Congress, crisis within the Republican Party, and race and representation, the session looks behind the news headlines to explore the meaning of democracy and the relationship between state institutions and democratic culture.
- March 14 @ 18:00 18:45 Business: Skills & Insight Entrepreneurship From Observed Problem to Business Concept with Surrey (KS5) Find out more » Professor Andy Adcroft is the Deputy Dean of Surrey Business School. Andy will lead students through a process developed with Surrey's undergraduates in which we start with an Observed Problem and develop a Business Concept/Solution. Andy introduces the importance of creativity, problem solving and innovation but stresses the critical skills and aptitudes needed to harness these things in order to create products and services that meet the needs of customers. For Business students and for students with a more general interest in Entrepreneurship, the session will offer invaluable insight and motivation
